
CLIENT DELIVERY SYSTEM

REPORTING

The six measures, baseline to Day 90

Owner: Claude compiles, Devon delivers.

`/how-it-works` already promises this to every client: "Every pilot tracks the moments between 'someone found you' and 'someone came back,' so improvement is measured, not assumed." This doc is how that promise gets kept.

THE SIX MEASURES

The same six, every client, every report. Don't invent new ones per client — consistency is what makes Day 90 comparable to Day 0.

#	MEASURE	SOURCE	WHY IT'S ON THE LIST
1	Source of inquiry	GHL lead tagging (<code>06-traffic.md</code>)	Where the money's actually working
2	Speed to first response	GHL timestamps: inquiry → first outbound touch	The single biggest lever on close rate
3	Missed calls recovered	Missed-call text-back log	Proof the cheapest fix is paying off
4	Inquiries → bookings	GHL opportunity pipeline	The number that actually matters to the client
5	Follow-up status	GHL: any open inquiry >24h untouched	Catches leads quietly dying in an inbox
6	Reviews and repeat signals	GBP review count/rating, repeat-customer tag	Prominence input + retention signal

BASELINE — CAPTURED DAY 0, NEVER ESTIMATED AFTER

Pull from `01b-seo-audit.md` the moment intake closes, before anything is touched:

- GBP review count and rating (screenshot)
- SEO audit health score
- Indexed page count
- Current rankings for the top 3 service + city terms
- Whatever review count / rating the client stated in intake §2.3, cross-checked against the screenshot

Without this, Day 90 is an opinion. With it, it's "reviews went 4 → 19, three service pages now rank page one, response time went from hours to under five minutes." Numbers, not a feeling.

WEEKLY (INTERNAL, NOT CLIENT-FACING)

Five minutes, checked against the kill/promote rules in `06-traffic.md`:

- Any lead sitting untouched >24h? Flag it to the client same day — this one's urgent, not a report item
 - Spend vs. the budget floor — on track to reach a verdict, or is the pace wrong
 - Any ad clearly underperforming the set

MONTHLY — THE CLIENT-FACING REPORT

One page. A contractor will not read three. Structure:

1. The headline number — one sentence. "You booked 11 jobs from 34 inquiries this month."
2. The six measures, this month vs. last month vs. baseline, in a simple table
3. What we changed — 2–3 bullets, plain language, no jargon
4. What's next — 1–2 bullets, what you're doing in response to the data

Never include: raw ad platform screenshots, jargon like CTR/CPM/ROAS without translation, more than one page, anything that reads as padding to look busy.

If a number is bad, say so and say what you're doing about it. A client who gets a bad month explained honestly trusts the next report. A client who only ever sees good news stops trusting any of them.

DAY 30 — FIRST REAL READ

- Cost per qualified lead, by channel
- Cost per booked job (the number that actually decides if this is working)
- Is the channel decision (`06-traffic.md`) still the right one, now that there's real data?
- Any structural fix still outstanding — a form that's leaking, a page that's slow, calls still going unanswered

DAY 90 — THE PILOT REVIEW

The moment `/how-it-works` describes: "We review inquiry quality and real business feedback, then improve conversion, response, reputation, and repeat business."

Bring the arithmetic, not a vibe:

- Full baseline-to-Day-90 comparison, all six measures
- Cost per booked job vs. the client's own average job value from intake §2.1 — does the math clear?
- Recommendation: continue as-is, adjust the structure, or stop. State it plainly. If it doesn't clear for the client's numbers, say so — that's the promise already made on the homepage: "If it doesn't clear for your numbers, we'll say so."

RULES

1. Same six measures for every client. Never customize the list — customize the read.
2. Baseline before touching anything. No exceptions, no "we'll estimate it later."
3. One page for the client. Detail belongs in the working notes, not the deliverable.
4. Bad numbers get said plainly. Spin costs more trust than it protects.
5. Day 90 has to actually conclude something. Continue, adjust, or stop — not "let's keep watching."
